

The Data Privacy Framework (DPF) is a voluntary framework that allows U.S. companies to transfer personal data to the United Kingdom. The DPF is designed to provide a high level of protection for personal data, comparable to the standards set by the European Union's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR). Companies that join the DPF can demonstrate their commitment to privacy and data protection, and they can benefit from the trust and confidence of their customers and partners. For more information about the DPF, visit www.dataprivacyframework.gov/

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) is the U.S. government agency responsible for enforcing federal consumer protection laws. The FTC has a long history of protecting consumers from unfair and deceptive practices, and it continues to be a leading voice in the fight for consumer privacy. The FTC has issued guidance on how companies should handle personal data, and it has taken action against companies that have violated consumer privacy laws.

The FTC has also been instrumental in the development of the DPF. The FTC has worked closely with the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.K. Information Commissioner's Office (ICO) to ensure that the DPF provides a high level of protection for personal data. The FTC has also been a strong advocate for the DPF, and it has encouraged companies to join the framework.
